Press Release

OCTOBER 2020

Authors & Aviators!

This November, the Helicopter Museum will host a second-hand book sale. With over 1000 books for sale, there will be something for everyone. Best of all, entry to our book sale and brand new café is completely free. The sale will start on Friday the 13th of November and continue all weekend until Sunday the 15th. Those brave enough could pick up a spooky Stephen King book on Friday the 13th!

Of course, a huge range of aviation and military books will be available. Described as 'a richly detailed air epic' by Aviation History, Peter Kildruff's biography of the 'Red Baron' Manfred Von Richtfolen will be a particular highlight. But for those of you not so into aviation, we have hundreds of fiction books as well. Everyone from Agatha Christie to William Golding is represented. So why not come along, support your local museum and picks up some great reads!

As an added bonus, all visitors who spend £5 at the book sale will receive a voucher for a free cup of tea or coffee. Our coffee also offers a wide range of hot and cold food to compliment this real Italian Lavazza coffee. Chef Colin's signature dish is undoubtedly his pilots' all day breakfast. A plate packed with egg, bacon, sausage, chips & beans, it is sure to satisfy even the biggest of appetites!

"The museum has spent the last 10 years self-funding our new visitor service building and café so it is just brilliant to see what fantastic facilities we now have to offer visitors. Just the other day, Chef Colin told me how excited he was to be serving tasty meals to our visitors again!" said the museum's marketing assistant, Rob Wood.
